Essentials in English: language, translation and literature

The programme in English and Translation provides students with a high level of communication skills, scientific knowledge of the English language, a thorough training in translation and the capacity for appreciating and analysing literature.

What does the course cover?

To achieve its goals, the program offers a variety of courses in language, translation, and literature. The program also endows the learner with various skills essential for teaching English as a foreign language (TEFL).
What does the programme give you?

Upon completion of the degree requirements in English and Translation, students will be able to:

- Understand the fundamental issues in linguistics – such as the structure, function, and development of the English language; its phonetics, phonology, morphology, syntax, semantics and pragmatics; and a number of other related subjects such as discourse analysis, sociolinguistics, psycholinguistics, and second-language acquisition.
- Translate texts of various disciplines – such as science, medicine, law and literature, from Arabic into English and vice versa.
- Understand the basics of language teaching – along with the methodology and techniques essential for undertaking a teaching career.
Career opportunities

The programme in English and Translation prepares students for the following careers and opportunities:

- School teaching
- Professional translation and interpretation
- Employment in language-related industries such as journalism, editing, copywriting, press relations, and advertising
- Careers in business, government, software development, market data analysis, administration, sales, and marketing.
